Fowls have no teeth to grind or masticate their food with, and the best they are able to do with it at first, is to pick it to pieces and swallow it whole. Kernels of grain are swallowed whole by them, and as they are surrounded with a tough pellicle or skin, which the juices of the stomachs of animals will not readitough pellicle were not broken.

Let horses, cattle or people swallow not lose their vitality, in consequence of the gizzard of a fowl of any kind, we tind a lot of small gravel stones, which are usually the hardest kind of flint, gran- doctrine." ite or sand stone. Surely here is a poctle flint-like stones, when their abode is ating animals. Fowls swallow their food runs into a grist mill, is forced into the gizzard, among the gravel stones. This gizzard is a strong, muscular stomach, and plays night and day, when there is grist to grind, similar to a bellows, contracting and expanding, thus forcing the gravel stones into the grain, and break- as Dr. Holmes is perpetually doing, newhole mass: after which it is in a sait- conclusions, in regard to himself; one, A title page, Index, xc, at close of vol. able condition to be quickly digested. Of course, these little stones will become to discuss ropes in the hearing of the very dull, after having been in operation family even of a physician who has been an economical miller, throws them out his own reliance on his new faith and of doors, and demands a better set; and if they are not furnished of course the grist is not half ground, and of course more than twice as much food is necessary to sustain life, and form eggs, as would be required were it well ground: feet in length, and drunk accordingly and of course the eggs of fowls would and who called at our office on Monday cost double in this case that they would accompanied by an axe-handle, to ask it in another with the same food. This suggests the importance of supplying is not expected to return within the memfowls and birds in eages with plenty of ory of the oldest inhabitant." sharp gravel stone, and of having their food bruised or ground fine before they eat it; and it suggests the importance of allowing fowls to feed themselves. When fowls have access to grain all the time we see them eat in the morning only a few kernels at a time, and after an hour or so, they will take a few kernels more, and thus they pass the entire day by eating a little at a time, and very often.

The philosophy of their cating so frequently and but a little at a time, is, the food has a sufficient time to become softened in the crop before it passes into the gizzard, and it has sufficient time to be thoroughly ground and digested: whereas, when fowls are not allowed to have necess to their food, but are fed once or twice a day, they become very hungry and swallow as much as their crops will of over hold at one feeding. Now for several hours no food will be softened sufficiently to pass into the gizzard, consequently their grist mill must stand idle. The moistened grain swells and distends the crop of the fowl, and it feels by no means comfortable. Shortly all the food in the crop is in the proper condition to be ground, and the result is, that it is forced through the gizzard with so much rapidity that it is not half ground, and, therefore, cannot be half digested; and if it is not half digested, of course not half the nutriment, or egg producing material. can be extracted from it. Nor is this the greatest drawback attending feeding fowls only once or twice a day. When a fowl fills its crop at one feeding, before the food can possibly get out of it, it begins to heat up, and derangement and ill digestion follow, very much as is the case when we fill our stomachs as full as they DIRECT FROM CHINA AND JAPAN! can be crammed.

My practice now is, and always has been, to allow my fowls to have free access to corn in the ear all the time, both summer and winter. Of course they are obliged to shell it for themselves. Occasionally we feed them screenings, and when we have no screenings [we take a peck or so of wheat, and as much buckwheat, oats, barley or rye, and mingle
